A. Definition

The term “free-floating” refers to a form or topical subdivision that may be used under designated subjects without the usage being established editorially, and, as a consequence, without an authority record being created for each main heading/subdivision combination that might be needed.

B. Recent revisions

2026-01: Updated template. Simplified text. Added instructions related to LCGFT implementation.

C. Caution regarding use

Free-floating status does not allow the indiscriminate assignment of a subdivision under any topic of interest. All free-floating subdivisions may be assigned only in accordance with common sense and subject cataloging rules, policies, and practices. Most subdivisions are usable only under limited categories of headings in specifically defined situations.

D. Types of free-floating subdivisions

Five types of free-floating subdivisions are in use:

1. Form and topical subdivisions of general application. These subdivisions are listed with guidelines for their use in Section F of this instruction sheet.
2. Subdivisions used under classes of persons and ethnic groups. These subdivisions are given in two separate lists: H 1100 and H 1103.
3. Subdivisions used under names of individual corporate bodies, persons, and families. Subdivisions used under names of corporate bodies are listed in H 1105. Subdivisions used under names of persons are listed in H 1110. Subdivisions used under family names are included in H 1120.
4. Subdivisions used under place names. Subdivisions used under names of regions, countries, cities, etc., are listed in H 1140. Subdivisions used under names of bodies of water are listed in H 1145.5.
5. Subdivisions controlled by pattern headings. Separate lists of these subdivisions are given in the appropriate instruction sheet for each pattern heading (H 1147-H 1200). General instructions for their use may be found in H 1146.

It is also possible to add certain free-floating terms and phrases to existing headings. For instructions on those terms and phrases, see H 362.

E. Procedures for assigning free-floating subdivisions

E.1. Authorized usage

Before using any free-floating subdivision, determine that it is being used in accordance with subject cataloging policy, as stated in the Subject Headings Manual, the subject authority file, etc. Information about the authorized usage of free-floating subdivisions may be found in:

- The Subject Headings Manual -- the lists of free-floating subdivisions in H 1095-H 1200, as well as in separate instruction sheets that explain the use of many individual subdivisions.
- Subject authority records -- subdivision authority records in which free-floating subdivisions appear in 18X fields, codes identifying their controlling instruction sheet numbers (H 1095-H 1200) appear in 073 fields, and usage statements and instructions appear in 680 and 667 fields; scope notes in 680 fields of subject heading authority records (cf. H 400); general see also references in 360 fields of authority records for generic headings (cf. H 371); and general see references in 260 fields of reference records (cf. H 374) when no generic headings exist.
- LC Subject Headings Tentative List, Summary of Decisions -- announcements of new free-floating subdivisions and changes to existing ones.

Note: Free-floating subdivisions: An Alphabetical Index was published annually from 1989-2011. Because existing copies are out of date, they are not reliable guides to instructions on currently authorized free-floating subdivisions.

E.2. Conflicts

Determine if the use under consideration conflicts with any previously established subject headings. The conflict most frequently encountered is the subdivision vs. phrase heading conflict, for example, Schools--Management vs. School management and organization. Use the established heading in each case unless a policy is in place to revise a particular type of heading. For example, in the 1980s, a decision was made to cancel all headings of the type [X] as a profession in favor of the free-floating subdivision --Vocational guidance. For subdivisions controlled by pattern headings, generally bring usage into conformity with the pattern lists unless there is a good reason to maintain an exceptional heading.

E.3. Topics not implied in headings

Use a free-floating subdivision under a topical heading only when the topic of the subdivision is not already implied in the heading itself. For example, the subdivision --Government policy is not used under headings that are inherently governmental in nature (cf. H 1642). The subdivision __Psychological aspects__ should not be used under headings for psychological concepts, such as __Emotions__.

E.4. Order of subdivisions

Combine subdivisions with main headings in the prescribed order to create meaningful subject heading strings. For a discussion of the two basic orders of subject heading strings, including examples that use Library of Congress Genre/Form Terms in place of form subdivisions, see H 1075 Section E.

E.5. Geographic subdivisions

Free-floating subdivisions that are authorized for further geographic subdivision have the notation (May Subd Geog) on the lists of free-floating subdivisions. See H 860 for instructions on subdivisions further subdivided by place and H 870 for instructions on interposition of geographic subdivisions.

E.6. Subfield coding

On the individual free-floating subdivision and pattern heading lists, subfield coding is provided for each subdivision listed. Most form subdivisions coded $v on the lists may also be used as topical subdivisions coded $x when assigned to works about the form (see H 1075, sec. 1.d.). (See LC practice note regarding form subdivisions in Section F.)

Note: As instruction sheets are updated to the current template, the lists of form and topical subdivisions will be separated.

E.7. Updating of LC records

When assigning a particular subdivision for the first time under a particular heading, check the existing entries in the LC Database under the unsubdivided heading in order to locate those records with headings that require updating.

Example:

> When assigning the subdivision __Social aspects__ (May Subd Geog) for the first time under the heading __Hunting__, examine the other records that have been assigned the heading __Hunting__ to determine those records, if any, that should receive this new subdivision (with geographic subdivision, if appropriate).

E.8. New usage

To use a free-floating subdivision in a new situation, or in a situation not authorized in the written guidelines here or in the individual free-floating or pattern heading lists, establish the new usage editorially according to the normal procedures in H 200, submitting a note of explanation at the same time.

F. Topical Subdivisions of general application

Listed below are general free-floating form subdivisions and those topical subdivisions having general application, or an application not covered by the pattern and other lists of free-floating subdivisions outlined on p. 1. For subdivisions having applications governed solely by the other lists, consult the appropriate list(s). On this list, statements are given of the types of headings under which each subdivision may be used along with definitions of use in some cases. For subdivisions that may be used under all types of headings -- geographic, personal, corporate, title, and topical -- the statement reads, "Use under subjects." Subdivisions authorized for use under topical headings may be used under appropriate headings tagged 150 as well as under headings with other tags that are divided by topical subdivisions. For subdivisions of general application that also appear on other special lists, all uses are enumerated here. See also references are provided between related subdivisions on this list. See also references to closely related subdivisions on other special lists are also given. Appearing with each subdivision are references to instruction sheets in the Subject Headings Manual which explain or mention its use.

LC practice: In 2025, the use of form subdivisions was phased out. Library of Congress catalogers assign Library of Congress Genre/Form Terms (LCGFT) to bring out the form(s) and/or genre(s) of the resource being cataloged. Therefore, the form subdivisions maintained on this list are not available for use by Library of Congress catalogers. Catalogers at institutions external to LC may use them as dictated by their own institutional policies.

G. Form subdivisions

LC practice: In early 2026, the use of form subdivisions was phased out. Library of Congress catalogers assign Library of Congress Genre/Form Terms (LCGFT) to bring out the form(s) and/or genre(s) of the resource being cataloged. Therefore, the form subdivisions maintained on this list are not available for use by Library of Congress catalogers. Catalogers at institutions external to LC may use them as dictated by their own institutional policies.
